MINIATURE ALMANAC. INCOMING STEAMERS.

If any one feature stood out more prominently than another in yesterday's cotton market it was the increasing attention being paid to a lack of rain in the Eastern belt. Heretofore conditions east of the Mississippi have been regarded as very favorable, and at the dry weather, with moderate temperatures, has permitted rapid growth and good cultivation. But within the last day or two many complaints have been received from South Atlantic states to the effect that if rain does not come soon the crop will begin to deteriorate. Much of yesterday's steadiness was due to this situation. In Texas a lack of rain has been complained of for some time past, and as yesterday's weather map showed little respectively. To DAY.

bert July 19.... THURSDAY, JULY 29. a lack of rain has been complained of for some time past, and as yesterday's weather map showed little relief, sentiment was noticeably affected, and more or less buying developed. At the same time bears were careful to point out that, taking the month of July as a whole, conditions over the entire belt have been as nearly ideal as thay have been in soveral years next.

July as a whole, conditions over the entire belt have been as nearly ideal as they have been in several years past, it was expected that the weekly weather report, which is due to-day at noon, would show mother week of favorable crop progress, and this had the effect of restraining outside support somewhat, so that the market, while steady, was rather narrow.

The opening was steady, with prices 3 points lower to 1 point higher, influenced by private reports of rains in Texas, which, however, proved to be scattered and very light. The Liverpool market was steadier than expected by a few points, confirming Monday's impression that it would be less ngitated over the Leclanaw matter than were American markets. The South, with Liverpool and Wall Street, bought rather freely after the opening call, and prices sold up 7 or 8 points above the previous night's close. This level was maintained with some irregularity through midday, as there seemed to be little selling pressure in evidence, owing to the complaints about conditions in the Eastern belt, which caused more or less covering by traders who went short on the break on Monday. Through the late afternoon similar responses to the previous night's close. This level was maintained with some irregularity through midday, as there seemed to be little selling pressure in evidence, owing to the complaints about conditions in the Eastern belt, which caused more or less covering by traders who went short on the break on Monday. The provision of more or less covering by traders who went short on the break on Monday. Through the late afternoon similar steadiness prevailed, and the market at the close was 1 point net lower to 6 higher, although the active positions were generally 4 to 6 points over the previous night. A late wire from Georgia said dry, hot winds were causing shedding, and it looked like ruin unless rain comes soon. An Atlanta less rain comes soon. An Atlanta man now in New York said that crops in both the Carolinas and Georgia looked delicate, were obviously in need of moisture, and not in as good shape as the trade here.
